

Workplace Safety and Health for Medical Clinics

Speaker: Malcolm Smith

Malcolm Smith is a competent and reliable individual with many years of experience in three demanding and high pressure industries worldwide.

Having completed training at the Royal Air Force Catering College, he commenced 18 years of exemplary service, demonstrating strong personal drive and determination. He is an experienced commercial catering manager who manages kitchen and staff in catering for events of all sizes, including private parties, weddings and corporate functions.

He was an employee with BP Sullom Voe, Shetland Isles, UK, one of Europe's largest oil and gas terminals, for 18 years. He was a fire, safety and security officer providing firefighting services, maintaining and monitoring site security. In addition, he lectured and trained personnel in basic firefighting skills.

With many years of experience supporting numerous junior and county level teams in various sporting fields in Shetland and a diploma in Treatment, Management and Rehabilitation of Injuries, he became a trained sports therapist.

The Workplace Safety and Health Act is an essential part of the new framework to cultivate good safety habits in all individuals so as to engender a strong safety culture in our workplaces. It requires stakeholders to take reasonably practicable measures to ensure the safety and health of workers and other people that are affected by the work being carried out.
